

To whom it may concern,

I just wanted to let you know that I am taking a Law of Mass Communication class at Buffalo State college. As our final paper, we had to discuss the FCC ownership regulation rules.

I feel that all regulation rules should be eliminated. I feel that the rules dominate the marketplace of ideas and because stations (both TV and radio) are supposed to entertain their publics, with more station owners, comes more diversity (both in personalities and in topics of discussion) more competition and more differentiation.

With deregulation, the free market will decide whats good and whats not, what goes and what stays. If its the interests of the free market at hand, there will be more station owners which means more range of topic coverage and with that, more needs and interests of the public would be addressed.
